

Anna Karenina

The Franklin Library, ...the distributing arm of the publishing division The Franklin Press was the United States largest distributor of public domain classic books produced in fine bindings for collectors until the company closed in 2000. Its books were designed and bound by The Sloves Organization, Ltd., From its founding in 1973 until its closing in 2000, the Franklin Library assembled titles into several series, each series consisting of 50 to 100 books. Customers subscribed to a particular series and received one book per month. It thus required more than eight years to complete a set of 100 titles, for example in The 100 Greatest Books of All Time series.

----- Here is a copy of Anna Karenina: A Novel by Leo Tolstoy translated by Louise and Aylmer Maude with painting of James Tissot Franklin Library special content copyright 1980 This hardback book measures approx 6 1/2 by 9 1/2 and had 771 pages. It has a finely sewn binding. It has an olive green blue leather covered spine and decorative gold design on the spine and on the boards cloth covering.
