

Dorothy and the Wizard in Oz

Excerpt: ...piglets? Youd never miss ONE of them, Im sure! What a horrid, savage beast! exclaimed a piglet; and after weve been such good friends, too, and played with one another! When Im not hungry, I love to play with you all, said the kitten, demurely; but when my stomach is empty it seems that nothing would fill it so nicely as a fat piglet. And we trusted you so! said another of the nine, reproachfully. And thought you were respectable! said another. It seems we were mistaken, declared a third, looking at the kitten timorously, no one with such murderous desires should belong to our party, Im sure. You see, Eureka, remarked Dorothy, reprovngly, you are making yourself disliked. There are certain things proper for a kitten to eat; but I never heard of a kitten eating a pig, under ANY cirstances. Did you ever see such little pigs before? asked the kitten. They are no bigger than mice, and Im sure mice are proper for me to eat. It isnt the bigness, dear; its the variety, replied the girl. These are Mr. Wizards pets, just as you are my pet, and it wouldnt be any more proper for you to eat them than it would be for Jim to eat you. And thats just what I shall do if you dont let those little balls of pork alone, said Jim, glaring at the kitten with his round, big eyes. If you injure any one of them Ill chew you up instantly. The kitten looked at the horse thoughtfully, as if trying to decide whether he meant it or not. In that case, she said, Ill leave them alone. You havent many teeth left, Jim, but the few you have are sharp enough to make me shudder. So the piglets will be perfectly safe, hereafter, as far as I am concerned. That is right, Eureka, remarked the Wizard, earnestly. Let us all be a happy family and love one another. Eureka yawned and stretched herself. Ive always loved the piglets, she said; but they dont love me. No one can love a person hes afraid of, asserted Dorothy. If you...
