Honestly, anyone who would love a portable cheat sheet to help make dining choices in late 2014 in Albuquerque and beyond. Coffee lovers, chile lovers, steak lovers, veggie lovers everyone is welcome to use this tool as a trusted assistant when figuring out your next tasty vittles. You don't have to be a visitor to the enchanting land of New Mexico locals will benefit from this guide, too. Add it to your arsenal along with any lists published in local media, your smart phone, and your nose. When finding eats your eyes and nose are your best friends you might spot something completely overlooked by all of the recommendation engines and it will be the best X you've had all year. That's called chowhounding and I love doing it, every where I go. There's a nice movement afoot to encourage folks to choose local businesses whenever they have a choice I encourage you to check out the hub website for info about local shops: <http://www.keepitququerque.org/> Welcome to Albuquerque. Take some photos, take your time, and relax were a good bunch of folks here and we love our chile. You will, too.

INTRODUCTION, HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE, OTHER RESOURCES This guide is a collection of Eleven Top 6 lists (because top 10 is just so ... average), broken out into themes. Ready for breakfast? Head over to the Top 6 A.M. section. And so it goes. You'll be in the know about 66 amazing spots in total (in homage to Route 66), near and not-so-near for all of your cravings. Each list is in alphabetical order, not any kind of ranking. Just so you know. Each list starts with an overview of the section or description of why the section is needed. And then, the actual list follows with a brief description of each place, their hours and contact info. Again, they are in alphabetical order no rankings implied. Just to make it on these lists a spot has got to be pretty darn good!
