

Liberalism and the Social Problem

The series of speeches included in this volume ranges, in point of time, from the earlier months of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannermans Government to the latest phase in the fortunes of Mr. Asquiths succeeding Ministry, and forms an argumentative defence of the basis of policy common to both Administrations. The addresses it contains deal with nearly all the great political topics of the last four years with Free Trade, Colonial Preferences, the South African settlement, the latest and probably the final charter of trade unionism, the Miners Bill, the measures for establishing Trade Boards and Labour Exchanges, the schemes of compulsory and voluntary assurance, and the Budget. They possess the further characteristic of describing and commending these proposals as interdependent parts of a large and fruitful plan of Liberal statesmanship. Of this scheme the Budget is at once the foundation and the most powerful and attractive feature. If it prospers, the social policy for which it provides prospers too. If it fails, the policy falls to the ground.
