

Pattys Friends

I wish I had a twin sister, said Patty; no, that wouldnt do, either. I wish I were twins, and could be both of them myself. What a sensible wish! commented Nan. But why do you want to double yourself up in that way? So I could go to two places at once. Here I have two lovely invitations for this afternoon, and I dont know which I want to accept most. One is a musicale at Mrs. Hastings, and the other is a picture exhibition at the New Gallery. They sound delightful. Cant you manage to go to both? No, theyre too far apart; and theyre both at four oclock, anyway. I think Ill choose the musicale, for Ill surely get another chance to see the pictures. Yes, of course you will, agreed Nan, a little absently, for she was reading some newly arrived letters. The Fairfields were in London, and were comfortably established in the Savoy Hotel. It was April, and though they intended to travel later in the summer, their plans were as yet indefinite, and they were enjoying the many and varied delights of the London season. To be sure, Nan and Mr. Fairfield were invited to many dinners and elaborate entertainments which Patty was too young to attend, but her time was pleasantly filled with afternoon garden parties or teas, while mornings were often devoted to sight-seeing.
