

Redburn. His First Voyage. (Annotated)

Wellingborough, as you are going to sea, suppose you take this shooting-jacket of mine along; its just the thingtake it, it will save the expense of another. You see, its quite warm; fine long skirts, stout horn buttons, and plenty of pockets. Out of the goodness and simplicity of his heart, thus spoke my elder brother to me, upon the eve of my departure for the seaport. And, Wellingborough, he added, since we are both short of money, and you want an outfit, and I Have none to give, you may as well take my fowling-piece along, and sell it in New York for what you can get.Nay, take it; its of no use to me now; I cant find it in powder any more. I was then but a boy. Some time previous my mother had removed from New York to a pleasant village on the Hudson River, where we lived in a small house, in a quiet way. Sad disappointments in several plans which I had sketched for my future life; the necessity of doing something for myself, united to a naturally roving disposition, had now conspired within me, to send me to sea as a sailor. For months previous I had been poring over old New York papers, delightedly perusing the long columns of ship advertisements, all of which possessed a strange, romantic charm to me. Over and over again I devoured such announcements as the following: This edition includes: - A complete biography of Herman Melville. - Table of contents with directs links to chapters.
