Dent in private dress. The rest in undress or mess uniform. As curtain rises, Hassenden gets up. Hassenden. RAY, gentlemen, dont disturb yourselves. The evening is young, and although duty calls me away, I should grieve to spoil your entertainment. Dent half rises. No, I insist. Presses him back into his seat. Dent. But how long is your guard? Hassenden. Till twelve oclock. Ward. By gad, well wait for you. Wont we, Castleton? Castleton. With all my heart--if his cellar holds out against our attack. Clifford. Well make a breach in its walls! Hassenden. No, no, you mustnt wait--I shant be returning. I have ordered my horse to be ready for me at the door of the guard-room, and I shall ride direct to Edgware. Devereux. To Edgware? Clifford. To-night? Hassenden. Without disrespect to you, friends, I have reasons for wishing to return home at once. Devereux. The usual reason, Hassenden? Dent. We can guess it, eh? A lady? They laugh. Hassenden. Yes, a lady--the lady whom I hope soon to present to you as Lady Hassenden. Clifford. Oh, your pardon, your pardon! Hassenden. She is our guest now. Dent. Youre well excused, then, and we mustnt press you to rejoin us. Hassenden. And, as you know, Castleton, I have a special reason for wishing to see her as soon as possible to-morrow. Goes down, R.,to fetch his hat which lies on a small table. Castleton. I know, Frank, I know.
