Mayhap, thou wouldst (answered the uncle); for then, my lad, there would be some picking-aha! dost thou tip me the traveller, my boy-Tom assuredhim he scorned any such mercenary views. I am only concerned (said he) that you should take any step that might tend to the disgrace of yoursels or your family;_ and I say again I had rather die than live to see you reckoned any otherwise thancomposf--- Die and be damned! you: Ihambing, half-timberd-son of a (cried the choleric Crowe) dofl: talk to me of keeping a reckoning and compassll--I could keep a rekoning, and box my compass, long enough before thy keeLstone was laid-Sam Crowe is not come G 6 her: here to alk thy counsef how to steer his. course- Lord, fir, (resumed the nephew) consider what people will say-allthe world will think you mad- Set thy heart at ease, Tom, (cried the seaman) Ill have a trip to and again in this herechannel. Mad! what then? I think for my part one half of the nation is mad--and the other not very sound-I dontsee why I hant as good a-right to be mad as another man-but, doctor, as I was saying, Id be bound to you, if you would. direct me where I can buy that sametackle that an arrant-must wear. As for the matter of the long pole-headedwith iron, Id never desire a better than a good boat-hook; and I could make a special good target of that there tin sconce that. holds the candle-mayhap any blacksmith will hammer me a scull-cap, dye fee, out of an old brass kettle: and I can call my horfe by the name of my ship, which was Mzgfity.
